

Introduction to Systemic Principles (Windsor and Maidenhead)

Introduction

Systemic principles have been influential in contemporary social work practice in a number of local authorities nationally. The London Borough of Hackney developed the 'Reclaiming Social Work' model, which has resulted in risk assessment and management utilising reflective clinical supervision (Pendry, 2012).

These approaches are not limited to social work practice alone and have uses within a number of other disciplines, including education and mental health services. Multiple ways of understanding enables the ability to develop different ideas of knowing, resulting in greater solutions.

AfC values lend themselves nicely to systemic principles as they focus on putting children and young people first; being resourceful adaptable and dependable; embracing diversity and championing inclusion; nurturing strong, responsive and caring relationships whilst supporting staff to deliver innovative and quality services in order to deliver the most effective solutions.

Learning Outcomes

At the end of the course, participants will be able to:

- Analyse and be conversant with eight key systemic principles and apply them to self, families and organisational context.
- Demonstrate confidence in applying systemic techniques arising from these key principles.
- Identify and apply these principles and techniques to assessments, understanding of risk and developing collaborative plans with children, young people and families.
